Apple to pay $30 mn to store workers forced to submit to bag checks

Apple Inc. agreed to pay $29.9 million to employees at its stores who were forced to submit to security bag checks -- off the clock -- when they left work after or during their shifts. Lawyers for the workers asked a federal judge on Friday to approve the settlement, which was reached after a protracted eight-year legal battle. Apple Store employees filed the class-action lawsuit in 2013, claiming the company was violating California law by not paying them for the time it took to check their bags. Apple declined to comment on the settlement. The company said in the agreement that it discontinued the check policy in December 2015.

UK terror threat level raised to 'severe' after hospital blast incident

An explosion outside Liverpool Women's Hospital on Remembrance Sunday was declared a terror incident by British police on Monday, resulting in the UK's terrorism threat level being raised to severe which indicates that an attack is highly likely. In February, the country's terror threat level was lowered from severe to substantial, which indicates an attack is likely. However, UK Home Secretary Priti Patel confirmed the upgrade decision taken by the Joint Terrorism Analysis Centre (JTAC) after an emergency Cabinet Office Briefing Room A (COBRA) meeting with British Prime Minister Boris Johnson earlier on Monday. What we saw yesterday is the second incident in a month, Patel told reporters after the meeting on Monday.
