Synopsis of the speech delivered by the Hon'ble Speaker:

Quantum computing is a multidisciplinary area that combines elements of computer science, physics, and mathematics, which can solve complicated problems more quickly than with conventional computers. Research on hardware and application creation are both included in the topic of quantum computing.

Due to recent improvements in computer power, quantum computing is poised to completely change how we meet our demands in the modern world. Complex issues that are challenging and, in many cases, impossible for conventional computers to process can be handled with ease by quantum computers. In addition, compared to conventional supercomputers, quantum machines are a billion times faster in solving complicated tasks. Numerous opportunities are made possible in nearly every element of modern life by such speed and accuracy.

In 1998 Isaac Chuang of the Los Alamos National Laboratory, Neil Gershenfeld of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT), and Mark Kubinec of the University of California at Berkeley created the first quantum computer (2-qubit) that could be loaded with data and output a solution.

Research in the area of particle physics or high energy physics is one of the most important uses of quantum computing. Models for particle physics are very complex. Therefore, numerical simulations need a lot of resources and long computing times. Take the Large Hadron Collider (LHC) at CERN as an illustration. It is hard to keep up with the one petabyte of data generated by collisions of one billion particles per second for experiments at the LHC. This is where quantum computing can help.

Quantum computing applications include the crucial task of training artificial intelligence. The intelligence demonstrated by machines requires training; quantum computing can simplify the task of analyzing millions or even billions of data points with accuracy and speed.

Quantum computing can represent other quantum systems more efficiently than conventional computers. For instance, consider Schrödinger's equation. A quantum machine can solve Schrödinger's equation for a molecule to accurately calculate its allowed energy states. Quantum computers can also simulate complex molecules that conventional computers are unable to. Researchers can develop optimum materials with finely tuned mechanical and optical properties by handling the noise in the qubits on quantum machines.

Quantum computers can also help tackle the problem of traffic control. Technology using quantum computing can be used to mitigate traffic jams and thus shorten waiting periods. Quantum routing algorithms can augment the entire mobility system of a city and can constantly interact with moving objects on the road. These algorithms can also be utilized in air-traffic control for enhanced routing information.

Quantum computing can enhance cybersecurity. Quantum computers can crack encryption algorithms that protect the infrastructure and sensitive data of the internet. Estimates predict that a quantum computer with 20 million qubits is capable of breaking such encryptions in less than 8 hours. Moreover, quantum computing can also be used to build much more secure encryption systems.

Quantum computing can be used for mapping complicated weather patterns. Unlike traditional weather forecast systems, quantum computers can provide forecasts for much smaller and more specific areas. This can assist farmers in preparing for weather changes efficiently and allow airlines to minimize flight disruption.

Quantum computers are very much efficient to solve problems more accurately and quickly but they require specialized techniques and materials, which face challenges around fabrication precision, materials quality and minimizing defects. Scalability can also require integrating multiple qubits, quantum gates and other components

Synopsis of the speech delivered by the Hon'ble Speaker

Stress can be defined as a state of worry caused by a difficult situation. Stress can be viewed as any circumstances that threaten or are perceived to threaten one's well-being and thereby tax one's coping abilities. Stress affects both the physical and psychological well-being. The way one responds to stress, however, makes a difference to our overall well-being. Well-being is the experience of health, happiness, and prosperity. It includes having good mental health, being socially connected, high life satisfaction, a sense of meaning or purpose, and the ability to manage stress.

There are a variety of stressors such as exam-related stress among students, job-related or family-related issues, and many more that can affect one's mood and cause distress, which ultimately impacts one's health and well-being. Major road-blocks like unrealistic expectations from self, excessive self-comparison, less openness to experience, less flexibility, and non-assertive communication can impact negatively one's life. Learning how to cope with stress can help us feel less overwhelmed and support our mental and physical well-being. Some effective stress-management techniques include- meditation, breathing exercise, intake of a healthy diet, regular walking, creative engagement, prosocial behaviour, socialization, connecting with nature, and developing assertive communication skills, etc. can help people to manage their stress more effectively.

This webinar systematically attempted to provide insights from the field of psychology to enrich our understanding of negative outcomes of stress, how to engage towards more solution-focused coping,

Synopsis of the speech delivered by the Hon'ble Speaker

Manuscriptology is a branch of knowledge which makes a systematic study of all the processes, though a manuscript under goes changes. It has been very important subject of study in recent years.

In ancient and medieval times different types of material were used for writing purpose, subject to the availability of the material in the part of the country. Bhurjapatra, palm-leaves, cloth, tulat-paper etc. were common material for writing. Instruments like stylus, reed pen (feather of birds); ink made by carbon black mixed with gum, turmeric etc. were used for writing.

Modern areas of Manuscriptology are:

Collection of manuscripts, conservation of manuscripts, digital cataloging, editing. National Mission for Manuscripts, Ministry of Culture, Govt. of India is continuing its effort from 2003. They are working on conservation, digital cataloging and support to edit unpublished manuscript.

SYNOPSIS OF THE SPEECH DELIVERED BY THE HONBLE SPEAKER

Synopsis of the lecture delivered by Professor Arindam Chakrabarti in an international webinar held on 26th January, 2022 on “Vivekananda Samajtantrik Bharatdarsan”. Republic day is not our day of independence. It was first proposed by Bhimrao Ambedkar at the Historic Valedictory Address to the Constituent Assembly in the year 1950. After two and half year of independence several representatives accepted our constitution in 26th January, and this does not merely represent the people of India at the time. We the people of India refer to all our country men irrespective of time period.

Professor Arindam Chakrabarti explained the book Bhartaman Bharat by during it into twelve principles.

Swami Vivekananda always fostered the idea of sacrificing self-interest and sensual pleasure for the sake of the masses. He also opined for the socialistic educational system. A man has delivers ways to achieve extreme success in life. Each and every words that Swamiji Preached, were coined from Mahabharata.
