Sharing is Caring

“When we share - that is poetry in the prose of life.” - Sigmund Freud

Riya and Sahil were fighting for the same painting box. Sahil wanted to paint an elephant. For that he picked up Riya’s painting box. Nine year old Riya could not tolerate her brother taking her box. Immediately she grabbed it back. Evidently a fight started between the two. Riya was not at all ready to share something she considered to be hers. Despite being beaten by her mother she continued to show her reluctance by shouting and weeping.

Not sharing is a very common behavior pattern found not only in kids but in everyone these days. Unlike the olden days, we have lost taste in sharing. The prime reason for not sharing is fear. Fear of security for the self. People are badly stricken with the idea that sharing means jeopardizing their future. Students don’t share their notes with their classmates, lest the latter surpass them in the class. Ladies do not like sharing the tutors of their children to avoid crowd at the tutor’s place. Professionals do not share their skills with a fear to lose opportunity at work.

We are afraid to share our skills with others because we remain preoccupied with the idea that if we share our skills with others the other person will grow while we might be left behind. Perhaps we have built a notion that runners outnumber resources. This is primarily because of the wrong interpretation of the slogan “Survival of the Fittest.” Remember one who has to grow and rise will do that against all odds. No one can stop him. We might impede the process of development of any person for some time but he might learn from somewhere and still move ahead. So in order to prevent somebody from growing and considering him/her to be a threat to the self is completely a futile and ill act.

Moreover if we are restraining knowledge with such an intention we are becoming an instrument in doing a wrong action indeed. We are also losing an opportunity to serve and earn blessings which surely betters one's life. If you really care for the self inculcate the virtue of cooperation and sharing your goodness qualities and skills with all. Do not remain confined. Confining from sharing means confining your destiny. It means you are sowing the seeds of bitterness and of course will have to reap the harvest accordingly.

Sharing today has been replaced by securing. Securing for the self is the only objective today. Though there is nothing wrong in securing for the self but do we really understand where our security lies? Actually security is in sharing. Not sharing makes our life more unsafe. Surprised? But it is the truth.

Once there were two poor men. Both decided to go for fishing. They were on their way to the sea. Luckily they received two items from a wise old man: one basket full of fresh fish and a fishing rod. One of them took the basket of fish while the other took the fishing rod. After that they went their own way.

The one with the fish basket could stay alive for a few days but while he was about to reach the sea he realized that he is helpless without the fishing rod. He died near the sea. The other man without anything to eat could not endure hunger for long and died on way.

There were another two men with the same situation. They also received the same two items: a fishing rod and a basket full of fish. However they were too intelligent and did not separate. They agreed to move together. They decided to share the fish on way. They ate less but managed to reach the sea alive. After reaching there, with the fishing rod could get enough fish for their future. Both lived happily thereafter.

Sharing is a great virtue. When we exchange ideas, our ideas multiply which possess greater potential than what we had before. When I inculcate the habit of sharing, it inspires the other person also to share, may be some day I am in acute need of that sharing. This builds a bonding of cooperation. There is a popular Hindi saying referring the power of sharing- One and One make eleven.

We have come on this earth to share. Life has been beautiful till we all were in a habit of sharing. Problems started accruing the day people instead of sharing started storing. Gradually more and more people started modeling wrong behavior patterns till the present time when most of us have adopted similar attitude. What is happening as a consequence is quite evident to us.

Relationship breakdown is primarily because of our confined nature. We have started limiting our inner beauty like peace, happiness and love to others. Relationships are beautiful if we share our inner beauty. We want others to share the innate virtues with us but we ourselves act miserly.

It has been proved scientifically that the bodies of people with confined minds do not allow natural and normal flow of energy in the body. Fear is an unnatural instinct. Body of a person who is continuously under fear can never expect to have a natural body for long.

Even professionally, ultimate winners are they who cooperate and help others also to grow. Sharing your skills is a revision of your abilities. You gain more clarity and command over the topic. So you will be more apt to do the same work compared to others. Not necessarily but it might happen that you might lose some opportunities but do not get threatened. Otherwise also we all lose opportunities sometimes in our lives. Your sincerity, abilities and goodness will definitely find a reward.

Sharing is a means of expressing care both for the other person as well as the self. The other person definitely gets the benefits. He grows; but at the same time you too grow. How?

Something you share grows. *If you share knowledge your knowledge will grow. If you share money your money will grow. If you share peace and happiness your peace and happiness will multiply. Anything for which you are becoming an instrument to share you will find those things growing in your life. This undeniable law works equally well with negativity as well. If you share negativity and disturbance you are bound to receive great disturbances. Real security lies in safeguarding the self from sharing ill energies while spreading the positive ones.

Sharing is a great virtue. Make endeavour to disseminate positive energy and ideas in the universe.

“Share, as it spreads positive vibes, which helps to overcome all tides”

“Sharing spreads positive vibes which overcomes all tides”
