Preface

Over the past years, humanities and social sciences diverged profusely, but are now converging again with all its future possibilities. This convergence has been influenced, in part, by individuals who bridge boundaries and established social science-humanities programs in captivating settings. The remaining challenge lies in interdisciplinary teams tackling intricate issues in the realm of evaluation criteria within social sciences and humanities. The increasing need for interdisciplinary approaches in the social science-humanities field will serve as a valuable asset for future exploration of the relationships between science, society, and nature. These endeavours have the potential to contribute to community-driven initiatives that aim for closer ties with society—initiatives that promote sustainability, responsible stewardship, and active citizenship. As a result, the strong collaborations among arts, humanities, and social sciences serve as not only places for empirical research but also cultural enrichment.

This book explores the metamorphosis of the emerging trends in social sciences and humanities that provide the platform for upcoming research. It covers the wide range of areas from emotional exploration in spiritual landscape to social marginalization, from integration of ICT as educational pedagogy to Curricular interventions, from contemporary discourse to cultural identity, clashes of Marginality and Intersectionality. It also explores the Patriarchy and Power Dynamics, self-reflections and cultural refractions, representations of the Indian diasporic communities etc.

Altogether it promotes the cultivation of interdisciplinary research. Interdisciplinary research generates more collaboration. Moreover, this interdisciplinary methodology considers more comprehensive understanding of complicated issues cultivating inventive answers for finding solutions to worldwide difficulties. As we dig scoop into the parts of this book, we will experience a scope of arising patterns and creative procedures inside humanities and sociology. These improvements hold the possibility to reshape how we might interpret the human experience and add to the prosperity of people and social orders. We expect that this sincere attempt of exploring the emerging trends will beget more collaboration in these dynamic and consistently advancing fields.
